

Programme Management

The programme management discipline with its big-picture view plays an important role in the successful delivery of organisational strategies.

BDA's expertise covers the entire programme lifecycle—from its early design and optimising phase, right through to delivery.

A vehicle for change

Most organisations 'live and breathe' their strategic goals; they are deeply enmeshed in the overall organisational approach, and typically involve a programme or portfolio of related projects to realise it. However, designing the programme and harnessing underlying projects into a coherent improvement process is a challenge that demands expertise, experience and management skill.

Designing for outcomes

BDA's expertise can be deployed at an early design stage where our high-level business planning, analysis and commercial skills come to the fore. We address commercial, legal, funding and other matters in order to optimise programmes that bring your strategy to life. Whether the task at hand is a capital works programme, a complex upgrade or a new capability, we aim to deliver measurable benefits and strategic outcomes, rather than a series of outputs.

Keeping an eye on the goal

As programme managers, we are adept at maintaining oversight of all projects without losing track of the goal. We consolidate the overall programme perspective with the purpose and status of projects to effectively support project-level activity. This high level perspective helps ensure that the aggregate result delivers the desired goals and benefits.

Programme governance

A programme is a major undertaking and as such requires solid governance to provide direction and control during execution. It is therefore crucial to define and implement a structure within which the programme can be efficiently and effectively executed. In the same vein, adequate mechanisms must be provided to manage risks, stakeholders, benefits, resources and quality.

Project dependencies and prioritising

Projects within a programme make up a mutually dependent network. As programme managers we identify project interdependencies, while also recognising other factors that help us prioritise projects and resources so that the programme is effectively aligned with the high-level vision.

Benefits realisation

Achieving the desired benefits is perhaps the most important aspect of programme management. We develop an integrated benefits realisation plan and chart metrics related to benefits. This clearly identifies when and how the desired benefits are achieved at a business level.

Programme management tools

Our toolkit ensures that we accommodate all constraints and complexities: baseline reviews, variance and trend analysis, advanced resource levelling and risk management methodologies along with budget forecasts. We know the challenges involved and we have the capabilities to successfully deal with them.
